The image features two identical decorative floral garlands hanging vertically against a teal background. Each garland is composed of three parallel strands of small, round, dried flower buds. The colors of the buds are arranged in horizontal bands: yellow at the top, followed by green, then a long section of white, then yellow, green, and white again. The garlands are tied at the top with small gold-colored rings and have tassels at the bottom. The entire image is framed by ornate, golden-brown scrollwork in the corners.

Two long, vertical floral garlands hang from the top of the frame. Each garland is composed of three parallel strands of flowers. The top section of each garland features a cluster of three gold-colored, bell-shaped ornaments. Below these, the garlands are made of white and purple flowers. The white flowers are small and delicate, while the purple flowers are larger and more vibrant. The garlands are set against a solid purple background, which is framed by ornate, golden, swirling floral patterns in the corners.

The image features two long, vertical floral garlands hanging against a dark green background. Each garland is composed of multiple strands of small, light pink roses interspersed with sections of white, textured material, possibly baby's breath or a similar filler. The garlands are tied at the top with thin white strings. At the bottom of each garland, there are two larger, more prominent pink roses. The entire image is framed by ornate, golden-brown scrollwork in the corners.
